Valued editorial,

My great thanks for the beautifully composed documentary "Mokum Aleph", which has moved us to the bone. A prime example of how historical and contemporary images can mix into a fascinating, poetic whole. The delicious calm of the camera work, the delightful tranquillity of the editing, together with the excellently written and spoken commentary (so we called that in earlier days; when we did not have voice over) led to a contemplative, poetic broadcast. An oasis between the loud programs of this era, in which everything seems to have to be sold with lots of bells and whistles and shouting. I'm not at all complimentary normally, but this has to be said.

Would you give this email to the makers? They deserve this laurel wreath.
